Re: Measuring Broadband America Program (Mobile Collaborative), GN Docket No. 12-264

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On August 29, 2013, SamKnows, representatives of mobile broadband providers and other interested stakeholders met in person and via conference call with Commission staff to review the current status of the mobile Measuring Broadband America effort and to discuss the following items:<sup>1</sup>

1. Schedule, Milestones and Updates
2. Feedback from carriers on mobile MBA Application and
3. Outreach Program

James Miller, Senior Attorney Advisor, Electromagnetic Compatibility Division (EMCD) welcomed participants and thanked stakeholders for their continued contributions to the effort and for the feedback provided with the ongoing beta testing of the mobile broadband measurement application. The feedback received from all stakeholders has proven extremely valuable to improving the Application program as the Commission moves towards a release to the general public. A new version of the application program (version 1.29) had been issued in response to feedback regarding drained battery life and stability issues. Mr. Miller explained that beta testing of the version 1.29 of the application was ongoing and encouraged users to provide feedback via the GitHub repository. He explained that a final beta build would be circulated soon.

Mr. Miller explained that beta testing data was being reviewed by privacy technical researchers and carriers engineering representatives. Mr. Miller indicated two formats have been made available for the datasets, JSON and CSV formats. He stated that program was on schedule to meet the Commission's target of a mid-October launch announcement of the program and release of the public Android Application.

Mr. Miller described the Commission's ongoing plans for outreach to consumers in advance of the public launch of the Application. He invited feedback on a set of frequently asked questions (FAQs) developed to support the Commissions' outreach to mobile Application users.

Mr. Miller thanked all the participants for their attendance and invited their continued attendance for future meetings.

Sincerely,

/s/ James Miller
